ASHGROVE speech pathologist Sue Collecutt has opened a private practice from her home specialising in the early intervention and prevention of communication difficulties in young children.

Mrs Collecutt started the business after having time off from work to look after her three children, who are now at school and pre-prep. She treats children from birth to five years and is experienced working with school-aged children as well.

"I am able to assess and treat difficulties in speech, sound production, language comprehension and expression, pre-literacy and literacy skills, stuttering and voice disorders," she said.

"I have 14 years experience in working with children in various fields including community health."
